

Staff members at Sally's Resident Care Home have often noted that seniors and their relatives seeking out nursing homes in Southern California are often unsure when it comes to the various types of available facilities. The problem is that laypeople often confuse terms such as "nursing home" with other terms like "retirement homes" or "assisted living." Nursing homes in Southern California and elsewhere are generally for seriously impaired people who require a very advanced degree of care. The best Southern California assisted living facilities, however, provide care that's more appropriate for residents who are still able to function with a degree of independence and can benefit from programs that emphasize more home-like environments with plenty of enjoyable social activities.

There are many truly outstanding nursing homes in Southern California but, for prospective residents who are more independent and require somewhat less individual assistance, Sally's Residential Care Home may well be the best possible choice. The facility for assisted living Southern California families and seniors have praised for years, Sally's has been providing a comfortable and friendly home-like atmosphere for countless grateful residents.

Sally's approach to Southern California senior care takes the psychological and emotional wellbeing of our residents extremely seriously. That's why, along with making the physical health of our guests a priority, we also place great emphasis on a full slate of regular activities designed to keep our clients healthy and active. From daily walks to regularly scheduled games, music therapy, and movie nights, Sally's Residential Care Home is devoted to preserving the ability of our guest to live happy live of the their own.

To schedule a visit or ask us any questions you might have, please visit our contact page or call us at 1-805-701-1246.